

Training for Responding in Peaceful and Positive Ways

July 23-25, 2008
Richmond, Virginia

Would you like to . . .

Establish a school culture for peaceful and positive behavior?
Ensure that your students know how to resolve their conflicts before they become fights?
Keep your school both peaceful and positive to ensure that all students can learn?

If so, sign up for Responding in Peaceful and Positive Ways training this summer.

Responding in Peaceful and Positive Ways has been designated a Model Program by the Center for Substance Abuse Prevention and an Effective Program by the U.S. Department of Education. Find out more at www.preventionopportunities.org

This training is for a three year program designed for middle school with 16 lessons a year for each year. All students in the school should begin with RiPP-6 and the additional years will be added in the second year.

This proven program can

- Promote positive models of communication and achievement
- Proactively teach violence prevention
- Increase school-wide attitudes towards non-violence
- Get a peer mediation program going in your school so that conflict resolution skills become routine.

This training will provide:

- Documentation of training hours for participants
- 3 complete manuals with student handouts for teaching Responding in Peaceful and Positive Ways
- Three colorful posters to assist in teaching the curriculum
